The Bully

Story By: Judie Eberhardt

Carson was going back to school after Spring Break. He had heard that a new boy would be starting at his school. Carson was anxious to meet him and make a new friend. That day at lunch, the new boy came and sat across from Carson. Carson said hi and asked him his name. The boy answered, "None of your business." Carson was surprised that the boy would be so mean. Carson ate his lunch in silence.

School let out, and on the walk home the new boy came up behind Carson and said, "Let me have your homework so I can copy it." "I know you finished it at school." "I'm not giving you my homework," said Carson. "That would be cheating." As Carson started to walk away, the boy tripped Carson. Carson fell, ripped his pants, and got a big scrape on his knee. The boy started laughing and ran away. Carson got up and headed home. "What happened?" asked mom when Carson came into the kitchen. The new boy at school tripped me because I wouldn't let him copy my homework," said Carson. "Who is this new boy?" mom asked. "His name is Jack, and I only know that because I heard the teacher call him that." "He was mean to me at lunch when I asked him his name," said Carson.

The next day Carson's mom went to the school and told the principal what had happened. Jack was called to the office and admitted he tripped Carson. "Why?" asked Mrs. Rogers the principal. Carson was only trying to be nice to you in the cafeteria yesterday when he asked you your name." "This is the third school I've been in since school started," said Jack. "I guess I was trying to be a tough guy so no one would mess with me." "Well, did it ever cross your mind that if you would just be yourself and be kind, the kids would be your friend?" asked Mrs. Rogers. Jack said he was very sorry. Mrs. Rogers said that Jack needed to talk to Carson and tell him he was sorry. Jack did apologize to Carson and his mom. Carson's mom invited Jack to the house for dinner. Carson told his mom that Jack is really nice but just had a hard time fitting in. "I'm glad you have a new friend," said Carson's mom.

The story begins with the heads of two feuding families, hunting each other through the forest at night. Hopefully you can make use of some of these fantastic short stories in your classroom! Did I miss any of your favorites? Short stories make a big impact in few pages. This makes for engaging class discussion. Click on the image below to take you to a FREE download featuring a variety of different resources you can use in your own Short Story Interactive Notebooks! This includes some of my best selling resources - graphic organizers, foldables, and other fun resources you can use in your classroom today! Interested in more Interactive Notebook resources? Short Stories for Middle School: Twist Endings Great short stories can be used to teach literary elements and critical thinking skills. It makes for an excellent class debate or writing assignment on whether or not she deserved her fate. Interlopers - Saki I only recently discovered this haunting short story. Click here or on the image below to download a COMPLETE short story unit. This is a great story to review plot, as the climax happens at the very end. The full text version of the story can be found here. However, the author usually gives enough hints along the way to give the reader the chance to figure out what is going to happen. The story pairs well with "Of Missing Persons" by Jack Finney, as both stories discuss the effects of time travel - although Finney's story is quite long, it is really one of my very favorites. The Gift of the Magi - O. As the first sunny day the planet has seen in many years approaches, the bullying intensifies, leading up to a heartbreaking finale. Harrison Bergeron - Kurt Vonnegut I love pairing this story with Sessler's "Examination Day", as both stories are set in the future and discuss similar themes about intelligence. While it was considered to be quite a scary movie when it was first released, it is quite tame by today's standards, and I have no problem showing it in my classroom. Henry Isaac Asimov is one of my favorite science fiction writers. After reading, I always make sure to show the kids the Alfred Hitchcock version of the story on YouTube. "Lamb to the Slaughter" focuses on a scorn woman, who has murdered her husband with a frozen leg of lamb. Also, the main character comes off quite spoiled and unlikeable. Their limited length ensures they get straight to the point. This makes for a great discussion about foreshadowing. For a full text version of the story, click here. These are great for teaching careful reading. The rest of the story revolves around her trying to hide her guilt and conceal the evidence. Later, after consuming massive amounts of cotton candy, panic ensues when an unforeseen rain storm catches the new neighbors off guard. Students who have seen Groundhog Day will be familiar with the concept, but I find this story to be much darker. Also, it is great for reviewing plot, character motivation, and irony. The story explores the concept of the "Butterfly Effect", where one small action in the past can have massive consequences in the future. However, it quickly became one of my all time favorites. Because of this, the characterization makes a great teaching example of how empathy and understanding are the keys to conflict resolution. His stories often have twist endings, and just the right amount of strange creepiness to make them extra appealing to this age group. I have students complete a plot diagram to go along with this story, and make notes on the actions of the characters that make an impact on future events. In the story, bright young Dickie is sent to write an exam that all children of the future must take. Because of this, I have my students draw maps of the island, and show where key plot events in the story take place. Why are Short Stories for Middle School important? As it is a longer story, I like to have my students practice their close reading strategies while reading, and annotate the text as they go along. In an effort to get to know them better, they invite them on an outing to a local fair. It has a twist ending will leave your students open-mouthed. Because of this, I usually end the unit by having the kids create their own propaganda posters for the main character in the story. He gives away his place while lighting a cigarette, and knows he has to escape. Also, I often integrate this story into my Social Studies curriculum, as use it as an introduction to our civil war unit. The Sniper - Liam O'Flaherty If you are looking for a way to draw in your reluctant male readers, this short story is it. In this story, the people of the future have been given "handicaps" to make sure that everyone is equal. However, I think that is exactly what makes it so appealing to students of this age group. Soon, he is forced to barricade himself inside his house, and fight to protect his family from the swarming birds. Also, it is easy to add (and subtract) new short stories as I discover them. Click here to check out some of my previous posts about Interactive Notebooks! He is pleased to discover that it only costs a very small amount. Because of this, they pack a massive literary punch. The beginning of the story is a great opportunity to teach students about how setting can help to create mood. A full text version of the story can be found here. Please post them in the comment section and I will check them out! Interested in using some of these short stories for middle school in your classroom? In the story, the main characters are curious about their new neighbors, who seem to be acting strangely. She then spends the rest of the story trying to repay her debt. This is because their patience and attention spans can often run short. I don't want to spoil the stories for those of you who are yet to discover them. However, the merchant has something more costly to offer him, should he need it in the future. The story picks up when young Harrison Bergeron takes over a television program, revelling against the handicaps he has been given. Because of this, it leads to great class discussions. Another story with a twist (can you tell I love twist endings?), students are always caught off guard by the ending. The misfortune of the events that unfold mature the men quickly, Robert J Sawyer once said: "A short story is the shortest distance between two points; a novel is the scenic route". Also, as it is set on a distant planet, it is a great story to use when discussing setting. The descriptions in the story are very visual. Short stories definitely have their place in the middle school English classroom. I have mini units available on all of the short stories mentioned above - and more! Interested in trying out one of my short story resources for free? Check out this short stories for middle school package, available in my Teachers Pay Teachers store - it has a whopping 185 pages of resources to teach 10 classic short stories! More Short Stories for Middle School Resources If you are looking for focused lessons on individual short stories for middle school, check out the short story section in my Teachers Pay Teachers store by clicking on the image below. This story lends itself to a great discussion about political propaganda. This is because the story begins with the characters being motivated by hatred, which quickly changes to the opposite. With guns, war, and a little bit of violence, I found that it really appeals to a lot of the adolescent boys in my classes. It has a beautiful message about giving, and the things we should value most. This story is a definite favorite among middle school students. This story is a bit longer than some of the ones I mentioned above. A full text version of "Harrison Bergeron" can be found here. This makes them great for reluctant readers. I now have a classroom set of my favorites that I can use when the mood strikes. This story is a great way to hook some of your reluctant adolescent boys. In this engaging and tense story, a well known hunter crashes his boat into an almost deserted island. As many full text versions of short stories can be found for free online in public domain, I simply google the title of each of the short stories I want. Examination Day - Henry Sessler Don't let the fact that this story was originally published in Playboy (!?!) stop you from using it in your classroom! Its dystopic version of the future makes it a hit with students interested in this genre. When it comes to creepy and strange, "Rain, Rain, Go Away" does not disappoint. My students are so accustomed to the special effects of today's movies, that they usually find this movie quite hilarious to watch. This is an excellent story for teaching cause and effect and character changes over time. With a surprising twist ending, this short work of classic literature is sure to engage your students. Because of this, it makes it a great story for teaching about irony and for reviewing plot. The unexpected ending is a great opportunity to teach irony. This is one of my favorite stories to read around the holidays. After, when the unit is complete, it is fun to show the students the classic Hitchcock movie, and compare and contrast the similarities and differences between the movie and story. A full text version of the story can be found here. The story itself is only a page or two long. They can also lay the groundwork for engaging classroom discussions and writing assignments. I have found that my students often struggle to locate the climax of the story when it happens so late in the text, and this is a great way to help them practice with this. The story ends with a jolting twist. This story is definitely creepy, making it a hit with this age group. I have only included a quick blurb about each. Just as they are about to shoot each other, a large tree falls in the snowy forest. The story is also great for visualization, as the final scene really paints a picture in the minds of young students. The Elevator - William Sleator This story revolves a young boy named Martin, and his overwhelming fear of an overweight lady who climbs into his apartment elevator every time Martin boards. The characters in this story are very well developed. Because of this, I often have my students illustrate before and after pictures of the neighbors. There are so many amazing stories out there, just waiting to be taught! As a true lover of the short story, I have tried to dedicate my teaching career to collecting some of the very best. Because of this, they make for great lessons on characterization. This traps both of them beneath it. The story revolves around a sniper sitting on a rooftop during the Irish Revolution. I also love to use it for teaching character motivation. These short works of literature grab a reader's attention right from the start. When teaching grades 7-9 English, our short story unit is the one I look forward to most. Mary's giggle at the end of the video is haunting! Full text of the story can be found here. Full text of "A Sound of Thunder" can be found here. A full text version of the story can be found here. It is hard to beat a good twist ending when it comes to engagement. Short Stories for Middle School: Create your own Anthology Too often I find that teachers limit the stories they use in their classrooms to those they can find in their classroom literature anthology. However, I have found that the kids get hooked into the story right from the start. Because of this, it is highly accessible to even your most struggling middle school readers. Henry In this story, a young couple low on funds try to find a way to get each other a special Christmas gift. All Summer in a Day - Ray Bradbury When Margot moves from Earth to the rainy planet of Venus, she is bullied by the other children who are jealous of her for seeing the sun. While his novels are amazing, his lesser known shown stories are equally as great. While they can be enjoyed by all students, they are perfect for the kids who are unable (or unwilling) to tackle an entire novel. Lamb to the Slaughter - Roald Dahl Roald Dahl is easily one of my favorite writers of all time. Be sure to read through to the bottom of this post - I have linked a FREE download of resources you can use in your own Short Story Interactive Notebooks! Short Stories for Middle School: Top Picks The Necklace - Guy De Maupassant In this engaging short story, a woman borrows an expensive necklace from a wealthy friend, only to lose it. Because of this, it is a great story to pair with a reading of A Christmas Carol. A Sound of Thunder - Ray Bradbury Set in the future, time travelers on a hunting expedition visit prehistoric times to shoot and kill a Tyrannosaurus Rex. Included are links to online versions of the stories. All of these stories are guaranteed to be highly engaging. The Birds - Daphne Du Maurier As this is the classic short story that Alfred Hitchcock's famous movie was based on, it makes for a great spooky story to use around Halloween. Later, when we are done reading, I like to show my students the movie version of the story, which can easily be found on YouTube. In the hour that follows, she contemplates her life while experiencing a wide range of emotions. The story easily lends itself to activities relating to symbolism, irony, and plot structure. This is because the whole love potion idea pairs well with Valentine's Day festivities. The endings often jolt the reader. It contains a full text version of the story, comprehension questions, close reading activities, graphic organizers, answer keys, and more! Looking for some FREE resources to use in your Short Story Interactive Notebooks? Because of this, it always makes for great classroom discussion. Because of this, it lends itself to some interesting classroom discussion and writing activities about the nature of intelligence. This is certainly a creepy story. Later, he discovers that the inhabitant likes to hunt humans. They promise to raise questions and instigate great discussions in your classroom. The spooky nature of this story makes it a great one to teach mood and suspense. This way, you can check them out yourself. After reading the story, students soon discover that the title is a great play on words. This is one of my favorite stories to teach in February. I like to create my own personal classroom anthology. I often use the story to teach persuasive essay writing, while having the kids debate about whether or not they think the main character should get away with the crimes. The story has a great twist at the end that will leave your students gasping. For a full text version of the story, click here. Favorite Short Stories for Middle School I included some of my very favorite short stories below. The Chaser - John Collier In this very short story a young man purchases a love potion. Because of this, they do not mind the length as much. Many of my favorite short stories have twist endings. The Story of an Hour - Kate Chopin This story begins when a woman is given news that her husband has died in a railroad accident. Full text of the story can be found here. I collected some of my very favorite short stories for middle school in this post. This is a great story to use when discussing bullying, as students tend to feel quite strongly for Margot, and can often make connections to their own lives. The Most Dangerous Game - Richard Connell This is one of my favorite stories to teach about mood and suspense. These are stories that I have used with my middle schoolers for many years. You can find a full text version of the story here. Then, I make copies, and put them all together in a duotang. In the story, the main character notices that the town's birds have been acting strangely.
